It was about his portrayal of the teenage prince Hal's downfall after he's captured by pirates. And I wondered how many of Shakespeare's plays could have been influenced by his experiences as a young man, after being kidnapped and robbed at the age of seventeen. Later in my life, I found the same thing happened to me. When I was about the same age as Hal, I was kidnapped and held captive on a farm for three weeks. My hands and feet were chained to my chair. My captors interrogated me for hours. They were going to torture me if I didn't tell them things they wanted to know. So, I pretended to tell them whatever they wanted to hear. And when the crisis was over, I was free to go. As much as I enjoy most of Shakespeare's plays, I think I'd like to try the theatre piece written by the man I was chained to in a small barn on a dark night in south-eastern Pennsylvania. I think I would enjoy it. It's called, "The Man in the Iron Mask." For some reason, I read the link to the Titanic about a thousand times. Until I could recite it by heart. I was in tenth grade. It was
