Enjoy! -Alex.. The focus of the current study was on the surface of the central canal in the rat spinal cord, but our study was not conducted in the ependyma or on ependymal cells, which also undergo apoptosis in injury and disease ([@B4]). We were unable to isolate single cell from the region containing the central canal. However, our group has previously shown that the ependyma is a metabolically active and flexible tissue which can adapt to changes in the central canal ([@B38]). Whether the lower levels of Bcl-2 in the ependyma are associated with the apoptosis of ependymal cells is beyond the scope of the current work and would require further studies. Conclusions {#s5} =========== In conclusion, this study demonstrates that lower Bcl-2 expression can be detected in the central canal of the spinal cord in association with apoptosis. These findings may be useful in determining the role of apoptosis in the pathogenesis of the disease and as a potential indicator for recovery in spinal cord injury. Ethics statement {#s6} ================ The current study was carried out in accordance with the recommendations of the University of Nebraska Medical Center Institutional Animal Care and Use Committee. The protocol was approved by the University of Nebraska Medical Center Institutional Animal Care and Use Committee (16-067-08, 17-033-10). The authors would like to thank Dr. Anthony Czajkowski for providing the anti-Bcl-2 antibody used in this study. Funding. This study was supported by the University of Nebraska Medical Center Department of Veterans Affairs merit grant (I01 BX000854-10).
