The prevalence of anxiety and depressive disorders among older adults with heart failure: a systematic review. Heart failure (HF) is associated with high rates of disability and mortality. Depression and anxiety are commonly found among older adults with HF. However, the prevalence of anxiety and depression among older adults with HF is unknown. The aim of this study was to identify the prevalence of anxiety and depression among older adults with HF. The following electronic databases were searched for relevant studies: EMBASE, MEDLINE, and CINAHL. The results were screened against inclusion criteria. A total of 817 articles were identified, of which 23 studies were selected for inclusion. Most studies used a cross-sectional design, with many measuring anxiety and/or depression as an outcome. Overall, anxiety and depression were found to be present in approximately 45% to 86% of participants with HF. Mean prevalence was higher among women, patients with left ventricular systolic dysfunction, and the sample in case-control studies. This review demonstrates that anxiety and depression are common among older adults with HF. Patients who present with HF should be screened for depression and anxiety, and treatment may help to improve symptoms and outcomes. The Hunger Games type Book Warning: This post contains spoilers for "Mockingjay, Part 2." Proceed at your own risk. Hunger Games fans are getting used to the idea that their beloved characters may not survive the end of the movie franchise. But in the new trailer for The Hunger Games: Mockingjay, Part 2, they may not be ready for the worst that comes next. As much as the first film tried to take the audience out of the Hunger Games reality, where victors are mercilessly slaughtered, Part 2 4bc0debe42
