I have a friend who's girlfriend and I have been talking about becoming more intimate. We've both had a bad taste of dating from the past and were curious if maybe we could start a friendship first. He told me to send a message to his parents first to see if it was okay. They'd met me once in a while when we would see each other. I'm very interested in his parents because we are both from Korea. My mom and dad are from the United States. I'm very interested in becoming friends with his parents. They were also curious so I sent them a message. How do I know that I'm not just using them to get what I want? A: I'll answer this as if I were your parent. You know you like your friend's girlfriend and you want to have some sort of relationship with her parents. Would you ask them about the potential of "living together" with them and your girlfriend? That last question would be too "casual" for her parents. (I'd say "call them" and then would talk to them and ask, gently, if it would be possible.) Would you ask them if they could be your parents-in-law when you're eventually married? Would you ask if they might consider having your girlfriend's family live with them as well? All of these would be things to think about before doing anything and to talk about with her parents. A: Tell them you have a friend that would like to meet them. If they say they will not meet them because of reasons, then take it as a no. A: I would probably say this as a teenager to my parents. I would never speak to them about my romantic interests, unless there
